Pressure Treated Pine

Naturally beautiful and economically appealing, Pressure Treated Pine has long been the most popular choice for wood fencing and is perfect for use in all types of residential and commercial settings.

With its distinctive grain pattern and long lasting durability, Pressure Treated Pine provides the natural benefits of wood, along with a built-in resistance to insects and decay.

So whether you're looking for the charm a picket fence, or the added security of a solid privacy style, you can rest assured that your fence made with pressure treated pine will provide value and architectural appeal for years to come.

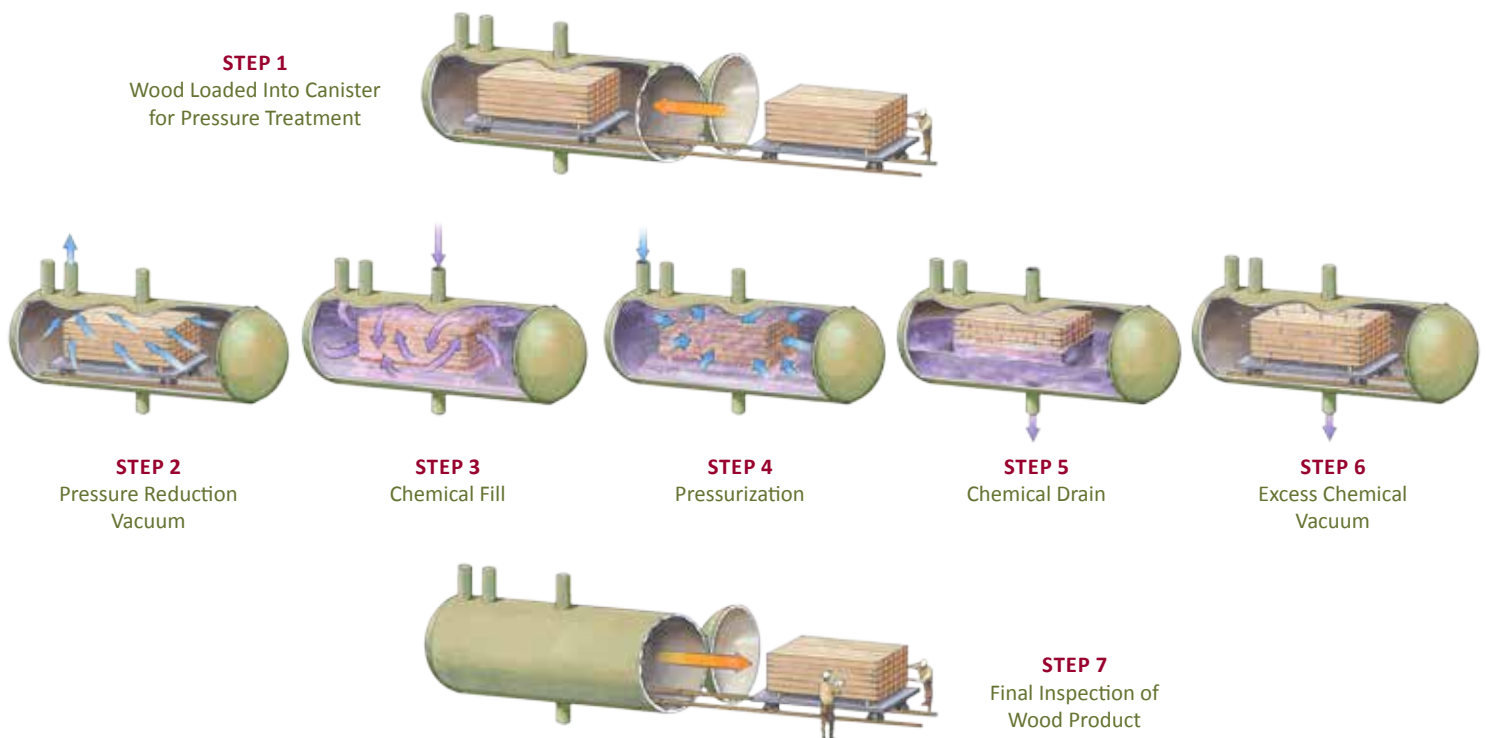

THE PRESSURE TREATING PROCESS

Wood is an economical and renewable resource; however, when left untreated it is susceptible to damage caused by insects and decaying fungi. You can protect your wood in a number of ways, but nothing provides the long-term protection that pressure treating offers.

In the pressure treating process, the preservatives are pressure injected deep into the wood, creating a strong and effective defense against decay, rot and termites. This added protection significantly increases the durability of the wood and ensures years of worry free performance.

Pressure Treated Pine also helps with forest conservation since much less wood is needed to replace projects built with untreated wood.
